Studio 3.3 Reflection

For my landing page I combined Greek Idealism with Pop ~~Surrealism~~ Art to show how traditional ideas of beauty can change through identity and self-expression. Representing the past is the white marble Greek statue, while the colorful woman represents modern individuality and diverse experiences. The bright colors contrast with the black background and white statue, which help make the woman and the exhibition title stand out. The bold contour lines help with outlining the figures, and the diagonal and directional lines guide the viewer's eyes across the page towards the title, exhibit details, and featured installation. I wanted my design to show a break from traditional beauty since Greek art was often focused on idealized proportions and particular standards of beauty. Placing the statue beside the woman, I feel helps show that beauty and identity can be expressed in different ways. The message represents inclusion, individuality, and acceptance of different lived experiences.

If I redesigned this landing page to represent the future, I would include themes like equal rights, environmental protection, and responsible technology. In the future artists may use virtual reality, interactive digital installations, ai, and recycled materials to communicate their ideas. I feel like these mediums could help people participate in art and understand different perspectives. I feel like my design shows that art can respect history while creating space for new voices and a more inclusive future.
